

Alton Bay Pavilion

This particular building was one of the Town's largest buildings and had been popular with residents and visitors during the course of its long history. In 2006 it suffered loss from fire. It has been used as a dance hall, a movie theater, restaurants, and in 1940 was converted into a skating rink, which is best remembered by the local townspeople and summer residents.

Skating took place at least six times a week, original cost back then was 35 cents admission. Skating took place until the 1960's

Between 1940 and 1960, a large number of name bands continued to play at the Pavilion.

The Bi-Centennial Ball was held at the Pavilion. Many renovations have taken place over the years, including a brief revival of roller skating during the 1990's.

In 2006 the building was in the process of being converted into condominiums before it was consumed by the conflagration.
